

ANTHONY PRIEST - personal profile

ANTHONY PRIEST

His interest in wildlife and respect for what he refers to as the 'Other Kingdom' is natural to him. He was a small boy prior to the war years (1939-44), and spent his early youth wandering the Great Park at Windsor. Many years of his adult life were spent amongst the farming community where he earned his living as a seedsman. In 1972 his interest in Fine Paintings led him to open a Gallery at Stratford-upon-Avon.

He contracted throat cancer in 1977 and was subjected to surgery which left him without larynx or vocal cords. He taught himself to speak again and it was after this traumatic experience that 'Tales of Wedge Meadow' evolved.

'The children of today are the wildlife custodians of tomorrow and may they enjoy all their tomorrows'
